A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, the St. Albans Bank, a corporation, duly incorporated by the Legislature of the State of Vermont, located and doing business at St Albans, in the county of Franklin, has made application to me, requesting me to issue a proclamation designating some day for the termination of the existence of said corporations.

bor the termination of the existence of said corporation:

And wholeas, it has been made to appear to me that two-thirds of the legal votes of the stockholders of said corporation were given in favor of said application.

Now, therefore, I. Paul Dillingham, Governor of the State of Vermont, in conformity with said application, and the provisions of section eighty-six and eighty-seven of chapter eighty-mine of the General Statutes of Vermont, do hereby issue my proclamation, and declare that on the twenty-fifth day of March, A. D. 1868, the said corporation shall cease to exist as fully and with the same effect as if said charter expired by the limitation thereof.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto signed my name and caused the send of the State L. s. to be hereunto affixed, in Excentive Chambers at Waterbury, this 23rd day of Settember, A. D. 1867, and of the independence of the United Stales the 91st.

Tennyson and Victoria. The Gartenlaube, a paper published in Berlin, gives the following account of an interview between the Queen and

Mr. Tennyson: "Queen Victoria is one of the most ardent admirers of Tennyson's poems, and shortly after Enoch Arden had appeared, she heard that Tennyson's enemics and enviers charged that poem with being immoral and a glorification of concubinage. Sheapplied to an eminent clergyman, and learned from him that such cases of bigamy, it was true, were not very rare, and those whom such a misfortune befell might, perhaps, aware that some of the high Church dignitaries were not very favorably disposed toward Tennyson. His open letter to a rector named Maurice, who had been removed from his ure, had not been forgotten. But since her husband's death, the Queen had accostomed herself more and more to attach a higher importance to the voices of her surround-ings than to her opinions, and thus she was for a while unable to decide whether Enoch Arden really deserved the harshness with which it had been criticised or not. Finally, she thought she had better consult somebody else on the subject, and she happened to apply to a person who censured Tennyson's poem with still greater severity, which was no wonder, considering that this person was no other than the lady who is commonly believed to be the subject of one of Tennyson's earlier poems, the cele-brated "Lady Vere de Vere"—the poet-ical rejection of an aristocratic coquette, when he was still a very young man.

After this twofold condemnation of Enoch Arden, whose wonderful success had meanwhile fallen in a thousand echoes upon her ears, the Queen thought it would be best for her to speak with the poet himself on the subject which he had treated of in Enoch Arden. She therefore extended her drive along the sea shore that very afternoon, beyond its usual length, and ordered the coachman to drive further west. Osborne, the Queen's country-seat on the Isle of Wight, is rather distant from the house able there, and the roads all over the island are excellent. She soon after saw the poet's house, which lies in the middle of a small grove of pines and firs, peering forth between the verdure and foliage around it. The Queen was accompanied by two of her daughters. When she perceived Tennyson's form in his garden-his long hair and full beard caused her to recognize him at a glance—she intrusted her sketch book and the metal box in which she gathered flowers and plants for her herbarium to the princesses, and walked alone to the low garden gate, whither Tennyson had already hastened to meet

She did not want to enter his house, but, walking with him along the edge of the shore, she explained to him what Or the Lives and Deeds of Generals, Statesmen, Orators and Political Leaders now on the Stage of Action, including Grant, Shermar, Colfax, Summer, Stanton, Sheridan, Yates, Curtin, Trumbull, Fenton, Backingham, Wilson, Greeley, Wade, Morton, Philips, Farragut, Chase, Logan, Stevens, Beccher, Seward, Boutwell, Dix.
